Kaisermutt Translation Notes

So the nun mommy's name is 永遠夜 (eternal night) with the furigana エンヤ (en'ya). According to Jisho エンヤ is either be a super obscure Japanese name or an odd transcription of the Irish name Eithne/Enya. I'm going to take a wild guess and say the redhead catholic nun is Irish and not Japanese. Eithne/Enya is the Irish name best known from the musician Enya (born Eithne, Enya is only the romanization) In the Irish language (aka Irish Gaelic), Eithne is read [ɛnʲə], which would normally be transcribed in Japanese as エニヤ (enya, [enʲa]) but for some horrifying reason it's エンヤ (en'ya, which is pronounced roughly [eẽja] because of that moraic nasal). If I were to romanize the nun mommy's name the way it is pronounced in Japanese I would have to use En'ya. If I were to write it the way we would pronounce the name it's derived from it would be Enya. If I were to be a cool dude who gets laid all the time, I would write it Eithne, the original Irish way and the coolest looking one.

TL;DR: Eithne is pronounced Enya, like the "who can say where the road goes" lady.

The Japanese word for copycat suicide is ウェルテル効果 (weruteru kouka, werther effect), borrowing from the English pronunciation of Werther rather than the German pronunciation.

The mom says こちとら (kochitora, I) on page 42. That's weird.
